March Lecture Luncheon
March 13, 2018 11:30 a.m.
UMC Room 235

Life and Death—Can't Have One Without the Other

Kim Mooney has spent 25 years working in end-of-life care and grief support through hospices, community organizations, and her company, Practically Dying. As a Certified Thanatologist (a student of life, dying and death), Kim offers workshops, presentations and consultations to provide people with the resources they need to successfully navigate the journey from wellness in life to wellness in death.

Kim has a broad range of professional skills but she says the most important thing she's learned is how to use the contemplation of life and mortality to see something amazing in every day and be less afraid of letting go. "We're surrounded by opportunities every day to let our hearts be broken open and to laugh until we can't breathe. Start by being curious."

A published author and in-demand public speaker, Kim has won awards for innovative approaches to death support, served as adjunct faculty in college death and dying courses, and hosts a quarterly radio show on death and dying on KGNU 88.5 FM/ 1390 AM Community Radio.

President's Message

“There is no better way of showing love and affection than sharing one’s culinary art with friends.”

That quote from the first cookbook, International Recipes, published by the University Women’s Club in 1964 seems fitting for Valentine’s Day. Five hundred copies were printed by the University of Colorado press and sold as Christmas gifts, Valentine’s gifts, and at other times. As a result of those sales, $200 was donated to the Women’s Center. The book was approximately 30 pages long and had recipes from eight countries including India (Curried Chicken Balls), Greece (Abrak – lamb and rice in grape leaves), and France (Rock Cornish Hens with French Chestnut Stuffing).

A revised International Foods Cook Book was printed in 1965 and sold for $2.00 per copy, with funds from those sales going to the Women’s Center, the UWC Student Loan Fund, the Alumni Center and Wardenburg.

In 1979, Sheryl Kuempel and Nancy Cateora, who were members of both the University Women’s Club and the Friends of the University of Colorado Libraries, dreamed of publishing a cookbook that would generate funds for CU libraries for years to come, and decided to implement their idea. They solicited recipe donations from members of those two organizations and also from non-members, creating a special brochure requesting recipe submissions. Specific instructions were given: “Be specific on seasonings, especially in amounts of fresh and dry.” “Use brand names when including prepared products as part of your recipe.” “Which wine do you prefer with this dish?” “What time of year are you most likely to serve this dish?” Recipes were accepted through the fall of 1979.

Then the testing began. During spring 1980, various Club members hosted Tasting-Testing luncheons and dinners. Guests were assigned recipes to make and bring that would be taste tested by all. The UWC newsletter (called MSages at the time) gives the impression that the events were enjoyable and very popular. They continued throughout the spring.

The typing, layout, and design of the cookbook was done by volunteers and The Colorado Cookbook was finally published in 1981. During the fall of 1981, UWC members contacted local book stores, kitchen and gourmet stores, and gift shops to ask them to sell the cookbook, and kept in contact with the stores to be sure there were enough books in stock. Books were also sold at special events. Sheryl and Nancy went around the state selling the cookbook. Fifty thousand copies of the first edition were sold in three printings. A second edition was published in 1993 and sold for $17.95. Approximately 80,000 copies have been made at this point, and a few are still available for sale on the internet.

Online descriptions of the book state: “Here is an imaginative collection of 662 recipes that have proven successful at all altitudes! In a step-by-step format, The Colorado Cookbook covers everything from treasured family dishes to exciting foreign fare. Presenting nutritional analysis, cooking and preparation times, and 18 full-color photos of Colorado’s beauty, this one-of-a-kind cookbook is a winner for all culinary skills and lifestyles.”

The UWC Centennial History Committee is in the process of determining the amount of money this immense effort has generated for the libraries at CU.

Tell Me More— about Snow Making

For more than 70 years commercial companies have been using cloud seeding to produce snow, but, outside of the laboratory, there has been no reliable method to measure the effectiveness of their weather modification techniques. Now, thanks to a CU Boulder team partnered with researchers from Illinois and Indiana, there is scientific proof that cloud seeding works.

Back in the 1940's, atmospheric scientist Bernard Vonnegut discovered he could make snow in the lab using particles of silver iodide on clouds of cold water vapor. Outside the lab, particles of silver iodide are projected into clouds causing the moisture to create ice crystals that grow until they are large enough and heavy enough to fall as snow.

Katja Friedrich, Assistant Professor of the Department of Atmospheric and Oceanic Sciences at CU, is in charge of CU's part of the project with the great acronym SNOWIE, Seeded and Natural Orographic Wintertime Clouds – the Idaho Experiment. This is a three-year program funded by the National Science Foundation and Idaho Power. Friedrich says “The experiment will provide new insights into the atmospheric conditions needed for effective seeding of mountain clouds, building the scientific foundation for weather modification as a tool for precipitation enhancement.”

When the cloud conditions were right (temperatures between 0°C and 15°C), the SNOWIE team launched two small airplanes into the clouds. One airplane was responsible for spreading silver iodide, the other responsible for measuring changes. In January, Friedrich and her colleagues reported in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, “The radar can only see [water] particles that are big enough and these clouds had tiny droplets not detectable by radar. Suddenly we saw lines appear. It was really astonishing.” The clouds’ water particles were getting bigger as they hit the silver iodide and froze. Within a few hours they had grown from a few microns to 8 millimeters in diameter, heavy enough to fall as snow.

In Colorado a Weather Modification Program is administered by Colorado Water Conservation Board (CWCB). Cloud seeding is the primary weather modification activity recognized by this organization. Most of the projects in Colorado have a goal of snowpack augmentation in order to mitigate the drought conditions that have become significant since the early 2000s. The $1 million weather modification program is funded partially by the CWCB through grants, partially by water providers, and partially by the ski resorts whose livelihood depends on an adequate snow pack.

In the Central Colorado Mountains River Basin, Western Weather Consultants operates about 36 cloud seeding generators which send plumes of silver iodide into the clouds when the right conditions exist. Larry Hjemstad, director of the company, has said “If we were able to do this over the entire state with all the mountain ranges, we could add the [water] equivalent of one entire river, [but] people are still skeptical.”

Now that SNOWIE will be able to provide data, we may be able to determine if this is an attainable goal.

Fun Fact: Bernard Vonnegut was the brother of novelist Kurt Vonnegut. The fictional “ice-nine” in Kurt Vonnegut’s novel Cat’s Cradle was partially inspired by his brother’s discovery.

Scholarship Donations – do you know how easy donating is with the “online button”?

The University of Colorado has enabled UWC to collect donations for its scholarship fund to support returning students directly through their online donation system. It could not be easier – click on the link on the UWC page and it will take you to the following CU website: <https://giving.cu.edu/fund/university-women%E2%80%9999s-club-annual-scholarship-donation-fund> with the title “University Women’s Club Annual Scholarship Donation Fund.” You may donate any amount you wish, pay by credit card, and choose to receive a receipt from CU via email or regular mail. We thank CU for this courtesy and hope you will try it out – the scholarship recipients will certainly appreciate it!

And don't forget – join with UWC friends to celebrate our scholarship recipients at the Scholarship Luncheon this April!

Lecture Luncheon February 13, 2018

Dr. Daphne Low spoke about her “historical” ghost novel One Short Sleep Past at the February Lecture Luncheon. She based her story on real places, buildings, and events in the late 1800s.

Next lecture is on March 13. Be sure to get your reservations in soon—deadline to RECEIVE your check is February 27.

Interest Groups Photos

UWC Spanish is off to a good start this semester. There are 8 students in our Básico 3 class. We are able to include more Spanish conversation in each class now and sometimes stay for lunch at Cantina Laredo where we have our classes. Juan Carlos is a native speaker from Mexico. He is an excellent teacher, arriving early for each class with a detailed and fun lesson plan. There is one UWC member who wants to begin at the beginning, so if anyone else is interested please email me at jane.chicoine@comcast.net.

The Theater Goers group enjoyed the production of Steel Magnolias at the Longmont Theater in February.
